The President's sudden disappearance on a sporting junket, four days after the assembling of Congress for what is certain to be a most important session, and on the eve of a communication of the first magnitude from the British Premier, involving one of the vital principles of our governmental procedure, is we beserve, without precedent and wholly at variance with a proper sense of duty and of his obligations to the people.

THE DRAMA.

HENRY IRVING IN "THE BELLS." "A CHRISTMAS STORY."

Henry Irving's powerful and thrilling embodiment of Mathias in "The Bells" was again set before this community last night at Abbey's Theatre, and again it manifested the wide scope and splendid intensity of his imagination and the allurement of his artistic style. That performance has had many imitations. direct and indirect, but it is unique, and it remains unapproached and unapproachable. It is the creation, not of the dramatist, but of the actor. The even half so fine. The employment of a preternatural agency is the actor's device, and the whole treatment of the subject, as metaphysical and less than dramatic, comes from his inspiration, and is Irving's presentn ent of this part is one of the most difficult and most surprising of all his achievements, for while he keeps Mathias absolutely within the limits of the character, as an innkeeper, he to the level of Manfred. It is only a great actor who can move with ease, and sustain himself in an at trench upon the border of the spiritual world. Irvblending of sweet human traits with the inveterate determination of tremendous will and the ceaseless liveliest impression of potential intellect, acute sensibility, and consummate art.

A pleasant play called "A Christmas Story" was presented as a prelude to "The Bells." It comes from a French piece called "Conte de Noël." by Mr. next in the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal TAX CASE WON BY THE GOULDS Maurice Boucher, the translation having been made is Paris and the time to-day. A young artist, somewhat overfond of convivial company, has become neglectful of his wife and child. It is Christmas Eve, and the wife, left alone beside the child's of Notre Dame, deplores her forlorn condition and estored to her love and to his home. The hour is late, and still the rover does not come. At length the poor young woman falls asleep. Two statues of saints-St. Nicholas and St. Rose-carved in wood by her husband, now become animate, and after providing gifts for the child, they declare their intention

MR. DEPEWS ST. NICHOLAS SPEECH.

SOMETHING OF A SENSATION CAUSED BY HIS ELOQUENCE ON ARMENIA AND CUBA.

Of the many notable and interesting features of the St. Nicholas Society dinner on Friday night, which was remarkable for the humor, the eloquence and the diversified readiness of its oratory, none was more commented on than the utterances of Chauncey M. Depew on the Armenian and Cuban issues. The enthusiasm which took up every sentiment and carried it aloft till the painted ceiling rang, showed conclusively, too, the temper of that cultured audience with regard to the passive attiof the National Administration.

The orator did not descend to mere personalities. He did not single out individuals as alone respons ble. He devoted himself to the existence of a world-wide apathy and to the spectacle of executive authority holding itself subserviant to policy and fears for party supremacy. He called attention to the entire Christian world standing still and looking on almost serencly while Turkey worked her bloody will.

This was by way of comparison to the historic readiness of the Dutch to aid the distressed and down-trodden, and the swiftness with which the Christian world arose to average the atrocities committed during the eighty years' war. The issue was whether the present century had grown nore humans. The conclusion, as the elegation piled news on news of repeated and ever-increasing cruelty, of rapide and slunghter unchecked and unpunished, was incontrovertible, in the mind of the speaker, that the world of to-day was not better, not more humans.

can demonstrate your right to be free we will give you liberty."

Here again the cheers arose high and loud. The remark of the speaker that the Christian world was standing still produced a sort of shock, as being something one would rather not believe implicitly. Rarely is it that an orator has a better audience than the one which listened with so much intentness to the speaker's arraignment. The men seated about the tables in that room at Delmonico's represent a long line of liberty-loving ancestry. The sensation Mr. Depew created was most impressive.

Meetings everywhere, however, of late have been passing resolutions on the issues involved in Armenia and in Cuba, in which the Cleveland Administration has been, sometimes openly and fully, as often by implication, arraigned for supineness in its treatment of foreign questions, and this speech of Mr. Depew and the manner in which it was received by the St. Nicholas Society are a pretty good indication of what many people think about these questions.
